

FRANCHISE GONE, 3D AVE. BRIDGE CO. LOSES ITS TRACKS

People Get a Demonstration of How a Contract Should Be Drawn.

The operations of a force of the Borough President of Manhattan, now engaged in removing the tracks of the Third Avenue Bridge Company on 60th Street, leading to the Queensboro Bridge, marks the final chapter of a franchise of which the city proved it could easily rid itself.

This franchise was not even a temporary grant. It was given by the Board of Estimate on Dec. 31, 1902, for a twenty-five-year period with ascending scales of compensation. But the franchise contract was so carefully drawn by the city authorities and so circumscribed with restrictions and other conditions that when the company defaulted in its obligations the city was legally able to step in and declare the franchise forfeited.

The franchise contract provided for a 5-cent fare, transfers on all Third Avenue Railway Company surface lines, running of cars at stated intervals and other requirements with conditions attached that if the company failed in any of its stipulated duties the franchise was to be declared void and forfeited.

Claiming that its financial condition was bad, the company discontinued service on Aug. 31, 1919. On Jan. 30, 1920, the Board of Estimate passed a resolution declaring a forfeiture of the franchise.

QUALITY JEWELRY

LAMBERT BROTHERS are quality
jewelers. They never sacrifice quality for price. If they cannot procure goods of the correct quality they do not offer something inferior at a lower price. Their policy of buying and selling only the best pays in the long run—they have been doing it for nearly half a century, and they will continue to do it.
